

Course Guide delayed by ASUS executive

Efforts by concerned students yesterday failed to resuscitate the ASUS Course Guide, and the Guide will definitely not be published this year.

Greg King, Editor of ASUS News, presented a motion at yesterday's ASUS executive meeting saying that the Course Guide was still feasible as there is competent personnel and sufficient time to put it out. He asked that the motion of Friday's ASUS meeting to postpone publication until next year be rescinded, and that a pro-tem Editor be appointed until Executive Applications had chosen a permanent one.

The executive voted 9-1 to stand by their original decision and delay the Course Guide until next year.

King said that it was extremely important that the Guide be published this year, because postponement of publication "would look to the faculty as if we're backing down."

Elliot Macklovitch, second year representative, objected that many people were trying to revive the Course Guide on principle, but not with practicality.

ASUS EXECUTIVE STATEMENT

We, the members of the ASUS executive, have decided as publishers to postpone the publication of Course Guide '67, realizing its significance and being unwilling to compromise its quality or its stated objectives.

This decision was reached in light of the following considerations:

1— The unwarranted and unauthorized offer by ASUS President Simon Taunton to the members of the Faculty of Arts and Science at their meeting on the afternoon of January 23, 1967, to eliminate the full names of instructors from the Guide, which, in contradiction to the explicit policy statement of Editor-in-Chief John Fekete, approved by this executive on Tuesday, January 17, has impossibly compromised the Editor's position.

2— The lack of response to date on the part of the majority of faculty members to the professors' questionnaires sent to them.

3— The difficulty involved in organizing the tremendously complicated operations of the Course Guide in the short time now available, as a result of the above two points.

The position taken by the ASUS executive in this matter in no way indicates or implies a lack of confidence in the ability, competence or integrity of Mr. Fekete, Editor-in-Chief of the Course Guide.

Approved at the Executive meeting of January 28, 1967.

Protest MTC fare increase

Students march on City Hall

Students from a number of Montreal universities will march on City Hall tomorrow in an attempt to obtain special MTC rates for university students.

The march, initiated and organized by a group of Sir George Williams students, will begin at 3 pm from the Union and Burnside Metro station. The marchers will then take a letter to Mayor Drapeau outlining their requests. It is open to all university students.

The demonstration does not yet have the official support of any student body. However, Internal Vice-President Ian McLean last night called for individual McGill students to participate.

He said the executive could not officially declare itself on the issue, but pointed out that Council had voted to present the Mayor with the students' situation already. Students' Society President McCoubrey could not be reached for comment.

Sir George Students' Society President Ron Luciano has come out in favour of the action, and will present the issue to a council meeting today in order to secure official support for the march.

UGEQ and Université de Montréal students have also been invited to join and are expected to announce their decision today.

The demonstration was initiated by Sir George student Mike Glassman yesterday and obtained the support of the campus newspaper the georgian. The organizers attempted to get Laurier Lapierre and Frank Hanley to speak, but both were unavailable.

A student who invited the MTC to send a spokesman was told "That's the Education Department's business".

The Sir George students plan to assemble at 3 pm on their

MacNaughton to chair Model Parliament

Senator Alan MacNaughton will be Speaker of the House at the opening session of Model Parliament today in the Union Ballroom from 4 to 10 pm.

MacNaughton was first elected to Parliament as the Liberal member for Mount Royal in 1949. He served as Speaker of the House from 1963 to 1965 and was appointed to the Senate last year.

Today's sitting will be filmed by the CBC and will be shown on the program "Seven on Six" as an example of how McGill students feel Parliament should be run.

In a closely-contested election last Friday, the NDP got the most seats, with 21 out of the 61 seats in the House. The Liberals came second with 20 seats, the Conservatives third with eight, the Congress Toward Canadian Maturity fourth with seven and the Society for Erasing Xenophobia fifth with five seats.

The New Democrats were elected on a platform favoring developing Canada as an "independent, democratic country." It looks for a "new taxation policy, nationalization of the basic sectors of the economy, increased spending on social welfare and a comprehensive labour policy."

Other items advocated were the creation of ministries of Economic Planning and of Science, repeal of capital punishment, repeal of the Indian Act, raising the old-age pension, creation of government-supported free education, abolition of the Senate as it now stands, immediate withdrawal from NATO and NORAD, recognition of China, cutting off trade relations with Rhodesia, and recognition of the role of the US in Viet Nam as one of aggressor.

Amendments postponed

The process of sending a wide-ranging series of proposed amendments to the Students' Society constitution to a referendum has been delayed again because of lack of interest.

Only 68 people attended yesterday's Open Meeting, less than half the 150 necessary to put the amendments to a referendum. This meeting had been intended to replace the meeting of December 16, which met with a similar response.

A committee under the chairmanship of Students' Council member Peter Smith (Graduate Studies) will be set up to revise the proposed amendments. All movers and seconders of amendments will sit on the committee.

Once the committee has been set up, the required three weeks' notice will be given for a new Open Meeting.

According to Article XVII (5) of the constitution, "A proposed amendment shall be put to a referendum within two weeks after a minimum of 150 members have so voted at an Official or Unofficial Meeting of the Students' Society."

Placement Service

As the Placement Service feels that the present system of interviews for male students does not seem to be satisfying the needs of most students, a new procedure will begin this week.

Each Thursday the first 40 first and second year students to come in will be given an appointment for the following week. Each Friday the same procedure will apply for the first 40 upperclassmen. This will completely eliminate the 1 pm appointment hour.

McGill/Sade

Many people have been troubled by the outburst of political activity on this campus in the past two years. The rent in the campus politic is seen by many as so divisive as to be irreconcilable. They fear that the only logical outcome of this activism will be the dissolution of the Students' Society.

The low turnout at yesterday's Open Meeting to consider constitutional amendments makes one doubt the sincerity of their concern, or else forces one to the conclusion that they have not realized the significance of proportional representation in solving their seemingly insoluble problem.

The reason that so much political conflict at McGill has not been settled in an orderly, peaceful fashion is the lack of adequate institutional arrangements which allow for political struggle without destroying the social system itself. Such a situation may arise for a number of reasons. For one, the relative recent rise of activist politics in the Students' Society has not yet developed into a respect for opposition rights. Thus our institutions are dominated by a spirit not of consensus but of partisanship. The idea of a speaker is an excellent institutional change which will guarantee equality to both sides in a political dispute and allow the Council to become a forum for meaningful debate.

Another source of tension is the disproportionate nature of Council representation.

The people who form the large faculties on campus and raise most of the issues can be overruled by a minority because of the present electoral system. Arts and Science students, therefore, must always seek extra-legal ways of having their policies adopted, since an alliance of the smaller faculties, like Law and Medicine, can frustrate their initiatives in the formal organs of student government. The reversal of this situation by instituting proportional representation would ensure the majority on campus of a fair say in Students' Society policies and avoid the frustration and bitterness which every political issue seems to engender.

The proposal to postpone the issue for four weeks or more would, in effect, shelve the idea of proportional representation for another year, and by that time it may be too late. It would seem far more appropriate that after Mr. Smith's committee has studied the problem, a special meeting of the Students' Society should be called on three days' notice. The amendments would then be put before the required assembly before the March presidential elections, so that they could be considered by the campus at that time. If passed, proportional representation would then apply to next year's Students' Council elections.

But then again, some people may not want to see this issue ever reach the campus, while others ... well, they're just gluttons for punishment.

The Ol' College Try

Dear Sir,

It is surely of the utmost significance that the immediate past president of the Students' Society, Sharon Sholzberg and the president this year, Jim McCoubrey, have during their respective terms of office come out strongly for UGEQ participation. The backing by McCoubrey is the more striking considering he was formerly against it. The significance must be that it is the only practical thing to do if McGill students are to have an influence outside the university.

It is also the idealistic thing to do, for nothing else McGill students could do would as well serve the cause of Canadian unity. Separatism is still a very real threat in Quebec. Speaking recently in New York, Premier Johnson, though trying to allay the fears of investors, did not discount separatism as an ultimate possibility but rather affirmed there was no possibility of it at the present time.

Under international law, the charter of the United Nations, Quebec would have the right to separate if it chose to. The federal government has taken to use the word nation in its press releases in French, which is to recognize that French-

Canadians constitute a people. The self-determination of peoples is a fundamental principle of international law.

Separatism as an intellectual force obviously grows more readily among students than among other segments of the population, and it is therefore of the utmost importance that the rising generation of French students be convinced that the English want to belong to the mainstream of life in Quebec.

If there were some other way to influence them, then that might be decided on, but unfortunately there is no other. Occasional get-togethers are no substitute for working together. St. Exupery surely well said that if men want to understand each other, they should work together.

Hard Sell

Dear Sir,

The "advertisement" by Taro Alepian in the Daily of January 26, 1967, is a perfect example of the clouded judgement and lack of objectivity which seems to be so prevalent in major issues on campus. This feeble facsimile of an objective report purports to reproduce the interview with Robert Nelson, president of UGEQ, which preceded the Students' Council meeting of January 17, 1967. Having been present during this interview myself, I found that, by structuring his article in the form of a dialogue, Mr. Alepian has completely distorted the content of the actual interview from which he pretends to quote.

To confirm this, I obtained and read the records of the minutes of this interview as recorded by Mr. Galloway, Secretary-Treasurer of the Students' Society. The minutes reproduce ACCURATELY, and IN FULL, Mr. Nelson's replies to Council members' questions. They show very clearly that Mr. Alepian distorted and falsified the facts. For example, part of his "advertisement" reads:

"SC: If McGill students do not wish to participate in a UGEQ activity, like a demonstration, can they dissociate themselves from such an activity?"

RN: McGill must not dissociate itself so that UGEQ will appear unified."

"Mr. Nelson said that naturally there would be certain policies with which some universities might disagree: however, each university could express an independent opinion. He gave as an example the fact that UGEQ had refused to participate in any way in Second Century Week during Canada's Centennial Year; but any member of UGEQ who wished to participate in this was free to do so. He pointed out that when decisions were made they were made by the majority, and certainly it was to be hoped that when the majority had decided on a certain policy, no individual group would work against such established policy in any detrimental way. However, any minority group could take whatever action it wanted by itself, but it should not make any attempt to stop the action decided upon by the majority. This would be a form of sabotage of the organization of which the group was a member."

Obviously, the quotation given by Mr. Alepian simply represents his own biased interpretation of Mr. Nelson's actual response. By what versatile feat of logic he arrived at such an ill-fitting equation is beyond comprehension. Unfortunately, this is just one example. Through the first part of this extremely invalid article, one finds similar distortions, out-of-context quotes, and misrepresentations.

To conclude, I would suggest that, in presenting the important question of "CUS, UGEQ, or neither?" to campus, Mr. Alepian and anyone else, kindly stick to the facts, and think rationally and objectively. Furthermore, if the Daily would print the minutes of Mr. Nelson's interview, so that students may judge his statements for themselves, then a great deal of misinformation and confusion would be avoided.

Love With the Proper Pill

Dear Sir,

I cannot understand why the McGill Health Service goes haywire over the Pill. There seems to be a morbid fear that if the Pill is supplied upon request hordes of young irresponsible girls will bombard the health service casting this highly conscience-probing organization in the dubious light of evil corruptors of innocence. What nonsense! It is every girl's personal and private decision to make, the same as if she wanted to go to the drug store to buy sleeping pills. It is just simpler to go to the health service to obtain pills than to have to get hold of a doctor's prescription (which incidentally costs $5 per visit). The point is, the health service does NOT have to make a moral judgement and is NOT necessarily encouraging licentiousness among students. Girls make up their own minds as to what kind of sexual life they want and availability of, or inaccessibility to the magical pill will not transform us one way or the other overnight. Girls will have intercourse if they want to, anyhow. It would be much more reasonable to make the best contraceptive devices easily available than to perpetuate the chances of pregnancy.

I would be only too pleased to see the McGill Health Service (and RVC) stop worrying about their moral stand since it does not, in effect, really influence the behaviour of women students. More credit should be given to the maturity and independent-mindedness of the girls at this university. They are the ones to make the final choices, not a group of clinical advisors who are insistent upon upholding the hypocritical mores of middle class society.

J. Roman, BA 4

Trafficking In Love Objects

Dear Sir,

It saddens me to observe that the debate concerning the Pill issue is still based on that myth of virginity. I actually believed that we had more or less recovered from the notion that bad girls do, good girls don't. If so much importance is attached to Miss Reynolds' integrity, she and those in similar positions should accept their responsibility. Let us hear their respected but unknown views regarding today's ethics, morals, concepts of right and wrong, sex and love, and that unfortunate institution of marriage. Why don't they discuss the real issue of why, who, how, when, where rather than take the vow of silence or pretending the problem is who may switch the red light to the green one.

Ignatieff tells Canadian Club

UN essential to world peace

by GEORGETTE JASEN

Canada's Permanent Representative to the United Nations yesterday expressed his conviction that "the international organization and the Charter are absolutely essential".

In an address to the Canadian Club of Montreal at the Windsor Hotel, George Ignatieff blamed the "rampant nationalism of our age, in which sovereign states are unwilling to cede more than the minimum authority to international organizations," for the defects of the United Nations.

Ignatieff said the aim of the United Nations is "to maintain international peace and security" and spoke of the "enviable record in peacekeeping which Canada has maintained." Now on the Security Council, Canada is promoting agreements and co-operation among the permanent members of the Council.

Recognizing that the Security Council is supposed to represent the main centers of power in the world, the Ambassador said, the Canadian delegation advocated the admission of China as a Security Council member, while retaining Taiwan representation in the Organization.

Another major policy objective of the Canadian government, Ignatieff said, was "to work toward disarmament as a necessary element of achieving a peaceful and stable world." Canada recently co-sponsored, with the United States and the Soviet Union, a resolution appealing for an agreement for the non-proliferation of nuclear weapons.

Ignatieff described the British as the pioneers in the process which has changed the face and character of the United Nations, having granted independence to 21 territories since the last world war.

This process has more than doubled the membership in the U.N. and has also led to the formation of institutions and agencies to deal with the problems of economic independence and growth. But, he added, far more needs to be done to combat the problems of hunger, disease and ignorance.

He also looked towards the future of the United Nations and the need for increased international co-operation. While demanding a bigger share of "the better life which modern technology puts within the reach of those who know how to use it," only a very small percentage of the world's population has the necessary know-how.

Ignatieff concluded optimistically about the prospects of the United Nations. He saw "a basic will to survive among all the nations of this world in the challenging and dangerous age in which we live, and a will to co-operate in the attainment of at least some basic objectives."

Le Carabin stories face obscenity charges

QUEBEC (PEN) — The contents of the report of the "tribunal d'honneur", appointed by l'Association Générale des Etudiants de Laval last October to judge the Dora affair, will be made public soon.

The report was submitted to the AGEL executive January 18.

The tribunal was to examine the journalistic content of two articles, "Je suis seul" and "Il faut aplanir le sexe", which appeared in the October 6 edition of Le Carabin, the student newspaper at Laval, which met with great disapproval from both students and university administration.

Jean-Paul Desbiens (Frère Untel) of the department of Education, Louis Fournier, political science student at l'Université de Montréal and past president of PEN, and Father Vincent Harvey, director of the review Maintenant were the members of the tribunal.

An eight-page report consisting of two sections, which were said to contain some very interesting documents, was submitted by the "tribunal d'honneur". The first section, compiled by Marcel Rioux, a Sociology professor at U de M, constitutes a judgement in terms of time, place and ideology on the "shocking" articles in the student paper.

The second section, submitted by Montreal lawyer Claude-Armand Sheppard, analyses the judicial implications of the two articles, notably the hypothesis of a possible transgression of the provisions of the criminal code in reference to obscene publications.

The following girls have been nominated as candidates for Carnival Princess.

The first judging will take place this Wednesday in the common room of RVC. Girls whose names begin with A-G are asked to come at 2 pm, H-P at 3 pm, and R-Z at 4 pm. The final judging will take place this Friday in the Union.

Las Vegas Nite

A new event, Las Vegas Nite, has been added to the Winter Carnival program this year.

On February 10, one week before the Carnival itself, the entire second floor of the Union will be transformed into a casino.

At 11:45 pm, the tables will be closed, and the auctioneers will set up their stands. Carnival Princesses, cases of beer, tickets to the Chad and Jeremy show at Place des Arts, cigarettes, Playboy subscriptions and other prizes will be auctioned off, using the money won at the casino tables.
